

Altman Technologies Wins Top Green Award with Pcounter: Think before you Print

Altman Technologies are one of the major prize-winners in the International Green Apple Awards 2007 for Environmental Best Practice. They have been given the National Green Champion Award in recognition of their Pcounter Intelligent Print and Copy Management software solution that encourages you to "think before you print".

The trophy was presented by top botanist and TV personality Professor David Bellamy, OBE at The House of Commons.

The judges commented "Pcounter is a centralised print management system - making people consider whether they really need hard copies of documents has had dramatic effects on their wastage and expenses, some users report 90% reductions in printing."

The Green Apple Awards campaign is run by The Green Organisation, an independent, non-political, non-profit organisation that recognises, rewards and promotes environmental best practice around the world.

National Organiser Roger Wolens commented: "We had around 750 nominations this year and presented about 80 awards, so Altman Technologies did particularly well to triumph against some very strong competition."

Mark Altman, managing director of Altman Technologies, said: "Pcounter provides centralised management and reporting for all print and copy activity - fitting all types of environment from commercial organisations and multi-campus universities to single printer cost control within primary schools. Pcounter is not only low cost to purchase, even more important is the low cost of ownership in terms of implementation and day to day management."

Many commercial and professional service organisations use Pcounter as well as over 60% of further and higher education sites and several hundred schools. Costs, both financial and environmental, associated with running and managing both printers and photocopiers have long been a target for reduction. The Pcounter solution typically saves an organisation 50% and more on their print/copy consumables budget as well as contributing to a reduction in their carbon footprint.

Altman Technologies are exhibiting Pcounter at BETT 2008.
